Using Learning Styles to Increase Student Engagement in Online Courses
Wednesday, February 3, 1-3 pm
Kayser Hall 543
Online courses have the potential to provide quality education to learners who may not be able to attend traditional on-campus courses due to geographical, physical or time constraints, but we know that not all online learners learn in the same ways. Developing quality courses that reach a range of learners and their preferred learning styles means that faculty need to take into account the differences among learners in addition to playing to the strengths offered by an online environment. This hands-on course will provide ideas and best-practice recommendations for creating robust and engaging learning modules that can be incorporated into courses appealing to a wider range of learners than ever before. Attendees will have an opportunity to discuss ideas with their colleagues as well as learn how to build activities into their courses. Basic knowledge of Blackboard is essential.

InDesign Workshop
Friday, February 12, 9 am - 5 pm
Kayser Hall 543
See the reverse side of this flyer for more information.

Beg, Borrow, and Steal (Efficient Course Management through Re-purposing Available Resources)
Wednesday, February 17, 1 - 3 pm
Kayser Hall 543
There are a wealth of resources available on the internet that can be re-purposed in your courses, you just have to know where to find it. This hands-on course will cover best practices for finding and purposing materials (including multimedia) and what you need to know about Creative Commons.

REGISTER AT: is.unomaha.edu/calendar.

All faculty and staff are welcome; however, space is limited and registration is required unless otherwise noted.
Questions or problems registering? Please contact us in the Teaching & Technology Center at 402-554-2024 or by email at uno, is.api@unomaha.edu