

INTERNATIONAL THIRD WORLD STUDIES

JOURNAL & REVIEW

VOLUME 13

2002

-
- Burundi's Regroupment Camps: Environmental Decline and the Role of Collective Discontent
Aaron Hale 1

 - Respectability Restored in Abioseh Nicol's "The Truly Married Woman," Echoed in Alice Walker's "Roselily"
Owen G. Mordaunt 11

 - The Silence of Women, The Voices of Women
John R. Warner, Jr. 15

 - Book Review: *The Quest for Legitimacy and the Withering Away of Utopia
Rory J. Conces 23

 - Book Review: *The Legacy of Vicente Guerrero, Mexico's First Black Indian President
Owen G. Mordaunt 27

 - Book Review: *Cuba, the Elusive Nation. Interpretations of National Identity
Maria Arbeláez 29

 - Book Review: *From Zaire to the Democratic Republic of Congo and The Congo from Leopold to Kabila: A People's History
Paul Allen Williams 33

 - Book Note: *Charting Caribbean Development
Matthew Marx 37
-

Maria Arbeláez is Assistant Professor of History at the University of Nebraska at Omaha where she teaches World, Latin American, and Latino history. Her research focuses on Mexican women, Latinos in the United States, and the history of the U.S. Mexico Borderlands, particularly the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. She has contributed articles to the Journal of the South West, Journal of the West, and the Mexican journal Historias, and has authored and co-authored several publications for the Instituto Nacional de Antropología e Historia in Mexico. She can be contacted at marbelaez@mail.unomaha.edu.

Rory J. Conces is Visiting Assistant Professor of Philosophy and a member of the International Studies faculty at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. He is also Director of the Nebraska Center for Critical Reasoning and has been the Editor of International Third World Studies Journal and Review since 1994. He is the author of a monograph entitled Blurred Visions: Philosophy, Science, and Ideology in a Troubled World (1997), and has published articles in numerous journals including Theoria, The Locke Newsletter, Southwest Philosophy Review, Review Journal of Philosophy and Social Science, Acta Analytica, Dijalog, and Socijaldemokrat. Currently, his research focuses on ethnic nationalism, selfhood, personal identity, and conflict management; the ethics of intervention; and extreme deontics. His most recent work on ethnic nationalism will appear in a forthcoming issue of Studies in East European Thought. He has lectured on applied philosophy at South China Normal University, Zhoushan University, and Hangzhou Teachers College in China. He recently completed a Fulbright teaching and research award at the University of Sarajevo in Bosnia and Herzegovina during the Spring term of 2001. It was during this time that he presented additional lectures on applied philosophy at universities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Kosovo. He can be contacted at rconces@mail.unomaha.edu.

Aaron Hale will be pursuing a Ph.D. in the Department of Political Science at the University of Florida. His area of emphasis will be Central Africa. He plans to examine the socio-political instability and dynamics of the conflicts in Congo-Brazzaville and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). His current research concerns the state of affairs of the state of Burundi. One portion of his research deals with the role of Nelson Mandela as the chief negotiator of the Burundi Peace Process and the implications of his stature on the socio-political fabric of society. Another part of his research is concerned with the role of the environment and its influence in, and on, the socio-political instability that has dominated the national agenda for the past decade. He can be contacted at ahale_1973@yahoo.com.

Matthew Marx is Instructor of English at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. He currently teaches composition and literature. His current research interests include contemporary poetry, medieval and Elizabethan literature, theoretical physics, Eastern philosophy, and Third World Studies. He is faculty for The Pendragon Circle, UNO's society for language, literature, and the arts. He is currently working on his first book of poetry. He can be contacted at mmarx@mail.unomaha.edu.

Owen G. Mordaunt is Professor of English at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, where he teaches courses in linguistics, ESL, ESL methods, cross-cultural communication, and black short fiction since 1986. His previous experience includes high school teaching, both in Swaziland and the U.S., and teacher training and university teaching in Swaziland, where he also worked for the Ministry of Education as Senior Inspector of Schools responsible for English. He is the Book Review Editor for the International Third World Studies Journal and Review. He has published articles on literature and linguistics in Africa Focus, Educational Studies, Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development, Tesol Reporter, Tesol Journal, and International Third World Studies Journal and Review. He can be contacted at mordaunt@mail.unomaha.edu.

John R. Warner, Jr. is Professor of Sociology at West Virginia Wesleyan College. He has taught at West Virginia Wesleyan College since 1970 and has served as chair of the Department of Sociology for 25 of those years. In addition, he has served as president of the West Virginia Academy of Science, West Virginia Sociological Association, and chair of the Faculty at West Virginia Wesleyan College. He is a Contributing Columnist for the Charleston Gazette, the state newspaper, and has published more than 170 columns in that newspaper. He has published numerous journal articles, including several articles in the International Third World Studies Journal and Review. He can be contacted at warner@wwvc.edu.

Paul Allen Williams is Visiting Assistant Professor of Religion at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, where he teaches courses in world religions, African religions, New Testament, and the history of Christianity. Born in Congo (Kinshasa), his general area of research is the history of religions in North America and in central Africa. He has conducted research both in the United States and in Congo. Arriving in Kinshasa during the opening of the national conference in August 1991, he remained in Congo through the events of September and October. His current research concerns the role of American Protestant missionaries in the Congo Free State, the history of Islam in Congo, and the war in Congo (1998-2002). He has an article accepted for publication in Annales Aequatoria. He can be contacted at pwilliams@mail.unomaha.edu.