DEPARTMENT OF MANAGEMENT
College of Business Administration

The Department of Management teaches undergraduate, graduate, and executive education courses in management, human resource management, and supply chain management. Currently, more than 500 undergraduate students are pursuing one of these concentrations. Faculty and instructors in the department collaborate and contribute to the “Capstone Cup,” a semester-long competition for business students in which they assume a consultant role and develop potential solutions for complex business problems. Faculty collaborate to expand opportunities for students and meet workforce needs. The department has worked with UNO’s Division of Continuing Studies and College of Public Affairs and Community Service to develop logistics concentrations. Faculty are highly engaged in the College of Business Administration’s outreach efforts, contributing to non-credit courses and leadership development training for organizations including Union Pacific and HDR. Management faculty member Gina Ligon, Ph.D. leads the National Counterterrorism, Innovation, Technology and Education (NCITE) Center, a U.S. Department of Homeland Security center headquartered at UNO that was established in 2020.
INNOVATION, DEVELOPMENT AND ENGAGEMENT AWARD

Christine Cutucache, Ph.D. is the Haddix Community Chair of Science, associate professor of biology, and the STEM TRAIL Center director at UNO. Cutucache’s research investigates molecular attributes of lymphoma and discipline-based education research. Her work in the Nebraska STEM 4U program engages K-8 youth in high quality out-of-school activities. This program has engaged 7,000 youth through sustainable programming, while serving as a pre-professional training program in teaching, research, and mentorship for undergraduates across the Nebraska system. By supporting teachers with the Teacher-Researcher Partnership Program and the NSF Noyce SCIENCE program, and new STEM professionals via the NSF S-STEM program have resulted in expanded retention of students in STEM. Cutucache has received the UNMC Graduate Studies Alumni Early Career Achievement Award, and the College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Outstanding Teacher award. Her programs have won the “We are all in this together” award by the AMS and Allies Trust. In 2020, Cutucache was selected as a Fulbright Scholar.

OUTSTANDING RESEARCH AND CREATIVE ACTIVITY AWARD

Nikolaos Stergiou, Ph.D., is the Distinguished Community Research Chair, director of the Center for Research in Human Movement Variability in the College of Education, Health, and Human Sciences, and professor in UNMC’s Department of Environmental, Agricultural, and Occupational Health in the College of Public Health. He is also professor and founding chair of the Department of Biomechanics. His research focuses on understanding variability inherent in human movement and he is an international authority in the study of Nonlinear Dynamics. He has published four scientific textbooks, 240 peer-reviewed papers with 15,000 citations. He was inducted as a Fellow to the National Academy of Kinesiology, the American Institute for Medical and Biological Engineering, and the American Society of Biomechanics. Stergiou’s research spans infant development to older adult fallers and has impacted many techniques and treatment. Stergiou has received numerous grants during his tenure at UNO. These grants have led to the development of research centers, inventions, and facilities all on the University of Nebraska at Omaha campus.

OUTSTANDING TEACHING AND INSTRUCTIONAL CREATIVITY AWARD

Ramazan Kilinc, Ph.D. is a professor of political science and director of Islamic Studies Program at UNO. He earned his bachelor’s and master’s degrees in international relations at Bilkent University in Turkey and his Ph.D. in political science at Arizona State University. His teaching philosophy is to foster student engagement in politics as responsible and thoughtful citizens. He has taught courses in introductory level political science, upper-level courses on Middle East Politics, service-learning courses, study abroad courses, and an honors colloquium. He is the recipient of the 2020 UNO Excellence in Teaching Award and the 2018 UNO Alumni Outstanding Teaching Award for the College of Arts and Sciences. His research focuses on religion and politics with emphasis on the Middle East. He is the author of Alien Citizens: State and Religious Minorities in Turkey and France and a co-author of Generating Generosity in Catholicism and Islam: Beliefs, Institutions and Public Goods Provision. He received the 2021 College of Arts and Sciences Excellence in Research and Creative Activity Award.
Associate Professor Sam Ammons is a work-family sociologist specializing in the boundaries between work, family, and leisure domains. Her intellectual expertise is reflected in her course topics the work-family intersection, labor studies, gender, and research methodologies. Her teaching publications focus on the integration of research within various courses. Recent student collaborations investigated what leads undergraduates to pursue research, and material culture analysis of "Lost and Found" items provided insight on the UNO experience of the COVID-19 pandemic. Additionally, she serves as an advisor for the department, and a faculty sponsor of the UNO Sociology Club.

A teacher of freshman composition, sophomore literature surveys, and upper-division courses for English majors and master’s degree students, Professor Darcy has taught courses on Sixteenth-Century Satire, the Heuristics and Hermeneutics of the Poem, Ancient Greek and Roman Drama, Spenser, and Milton, Critical Theory, and Renaissance Lyric. He has published a one-week unit for teaching Shakespeare’s sonnets in SMART: Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Teaching.

Paul H. Davis, Ph.D. formed UNO’s Health Careers Resource Center in 2016 to provide career advising to more than 2,000 pre-health students at UNO. He also directs the UNO/UNMC Urban Health Opportunities Program (UHOP), a student pipeline designed to increase the diversity of health care providers in urban areas of Nebraska, as well as several other federally funded scholarship and fellowship programs. In addition, he leads a successful infectious diseases research laboratory where mentored undergraduate students have gone on to top research institutes, and who have received national research scholarships such as the Goldwater and Fulbright awards.

Abby Bjornsen-Ramig is an associate professor in the Department of Counseling. Her research interests include career development and wellness in college students and student-athletes. She has published numerous manuscripts in this area, examining the career transitions of student athletes as well as graduate student attitudes toward career counseling. As a member of the Department of Counseling, she teaches Work and Wellness and supervises advanced graduate students in their practicum and internship semesters. Bjornsen-Ramig serves as the Clinical Coordinator for the Community Counseling Clinic in Rosskens Hall, training counselors to serve a diverse client population from the UNO campus and Omaha metropolitan community.

Jamie Wagner is an associate professor of Economics and director of the Center for Economic Education at UNO. Wagner received her Ph.D. in economics from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. She teaches undergraduate economics courses and through the Center for Economic Education, works with preservice and K-12 teachers in the Omaha area. Wagner’s research interests include economic education, economic pedagogy, and financial literacy. Her research has been published in the Journal for Economic Education and the Journal of Consumer Affairs among other journals. She is a dynamic speaker who demonstrates economic and financial literacy concepts through interactive activities including simulations, discussions, and games.
Jodi Benenson’s teaching and research interests include civic engagement, nonprofit organizations, social policy, and social equity. As an assistant professor in the School of Public Administration, she incorporates service-learning and other civically engaged pedagogies into her teaching, and serves on dissertation and thesis committees throughout the university. She also serves as the Academic Director for the U.S. Department of State’s Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative (YSFALI) Institute on Civic Engagement, and has published community-engaged teaching and research in venues such as the Journal of Public Affairs Education, the Journal of Community Engagement and Higher Education, and the Journal of Nonprofit Education and Leadership.

Assistant Professor Briana B. Morrison’s research interests are computer science education and broadening participation in computing. As a former member of the Department of Computer Science, she has worked to re-design the introductory programming sequence of courses to use active learning components to improve student learning outcomes. She has also taught in the Masters of Computer Science Education program, which is geared toward helping to prepare K-12 teachers to incorporate inclusive pedagogy and evidence-based teaching practices into the computing classroom.

Professor Emeritus Hugh Reilly’s primary teaching focus is Advertising and Public Relations. He also taught several journalism writing courses and two speech courses. During his 22 years at UNO, he taught 19 different courses. His research focused on advertising and PR issues but he also published extensively on the history of frontier newspapers. He led several student groups to Ireland and England. While director of UNO’s School of Communication, he participated in a State Department grant working with Afghan professors to help launch Communications Studies programs at two Afghan universities.

Assistant Professor Seunghee Kim’s teaches Geotechnical Engineering, one of the sub-disciplines under the umbrella of Civil and Environmental Engineering. Kim offers undergraduate and graduate courses addressing topics in the field of Geotechnical Engineering and emerging and novel topics related to the energy, environmental, and sustainability issues. His research includes the pore-scale study of reactive/multiphase fluid flow in porous media, hydro-chemo-thermo-mechanically coupled processes in energy-geotechnics, and underground use. These topics tackle challenges for the success of many energy/environmental operations, such as carbon use and geologic storage, geo-energy storage, and nuclear waste sequestration.
DISTINGUISHED RESEARCH OR CREATIVE ACTIVITY AWARD

Paul H. Davis, Ph.D., Distinguished Professor of Biology, is an infectious disease scientist who uses a combination of molecular biology and bioinformatics to identify promising new antimicrobial compounds for future clinical use. Most of his focus is on global health, where he seeks to address needs in underdeveloped areas of the world. He has co-authored several scientific publications and patent applications, supported by the mentees in his translational biomedical research laboratory. Moreover, Davis helps lead multiple federally funded internships at UNO including INBRE, ADEPT, UHOP, and AHFC scholars programs, which help prepare students for careers in biomedical research and clinical care. He serves as founding director of the UNO Health Careers Resource Center, an advising center for UNO’s pre-health students.

PAUL H. DAVIS, Ph.D.
Biology

DISTINGUISHED RESEARCH OR CREATIVE ACTIVITY AWARD

Guoqing Lu is a professor of biology at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. He earned his Ph.D. in biology and his two MSc degrees respectively in computer science and biology. He studies a broad spectrum of biological problems from virus evolution to ecosystem function using interdisciplinary approaches. He has made highly significant and original research contributions in bioinformatics and genomics recognized nationally and internationally. He has published over 100 peer-reviewed research articles and received external funding from NIH, NSF, USDA, USFWS. He serves as an associate editor or editorial board member of several international journals. He develops and maintains several web resources serving research communities. He received the College of Arts and Sciences Research or Creative Activity Award and holds an Isaacson Professorship.

GUOQING LU, Ph.D.

EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING AWARD

Kelly Gomez Johnson is an assistant professor of STEM Education at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. Her teaching and research focus on effective and equitable K-16 STEM teaching, learning and leadership practices, particularly in mathematics. Her collaborative work and leadership on internal and external projects have attracted nearly $4 million dollars in funding since 2016. These student-centered projects investigate active teaching and learning communities in college mathematics, multi-layered support mechanisms for underrepresented students in STEM, and scholarship programs to recruitment, develop and retain and retention of highly qualified STEM teachers. She teaches both undergraduate and graduate courses in Teacher Education, provides mentorship to students across campus, and collaborates with community organizations to provide access and support to students, staff, and faculty. Her philosophy as an educator is to serve and empower others in relevant learning experiences and opportunities that enrich their lives.

KELLY GOMEZ JOHNSON, Ed.D.

COLLEGE SPECIFIC NAMED CHAIRS AND PROFESSORSHIPS

HOLLIS AND HELEN BARIGHT FOUNDATION PROFESSOR OF REAL ESTATE STUDIES

David Beberwyk is a Real Estate Lecturer in CBA as well as the UNO Real Estate Program director and co-director of the UNO Real Estate Center. In his roles as a teacher, advisor, and mentor, Beberwyk is wholeheartedly committed to students throughout their academic journeys and beyond. With a contagious zeal for "all things real estate," he provides impassioned instruction, opportunities for internships, and empathetic career guidance to students. As a result of his efforts, the UNO Real Estate Program has experienced three-fold growth since 2015 (42-160 students).

DAVID BEBERWYK, M.S.
Finance, Banking and Real Estate

ROBERT T. REILLY PROFESSOR OF COMMUNICATION

Professor Chin-Chung Chao’s primary teaching and research interests span conflict management, leadership, intercultural communication, organizational communication, and media communication. She has gained international recognition in her research field. Her most recently edited book, Asian Woman Leadership: A Cross-National and Cross-Sector Comparison is but one of the many examples that represent her distinguished scholarship. She has published two books, 20 peer-reviewed articles, and 10 book chapters. Her research has won multiple awards and grants. Thanks to the Robert T. Reilly Professorship and CFAM family, she has genuinely lived her life philosophy through her career at UNO. She has tried her best to embody the full integration of scholarship, service, and pedagogy, and she will still do her best to bring positive impact to her department, institution, and everyone she meets.

CHIN-CHUNG CHAO, Ph.D.
Communication
Samantha Clinkinbeard is an associate professor and Undergraduate Program Coordinator in criminology and criminal justice. Her research is focused on women in policing, including the presence of masculinity and issues surrounding recruitment and retention. She has worked with several community agencies, taught a variety of courses, and mentored several students while at UNO. She was recognized with the CPACS Alumni Outstanding Teaching Award in 2020. She is honored to be named the Elizabeth H. Reynolds and Beverly B. Reynolds Professor of Public Affairs and Community Service, believing it celebrates the positive impact that can result from the integration of the roles of scholar, teacher, administrator, and citizen.

Samantha Clinkinbeard, Ph.D.
Criminology and Criminal Justice

MARGARET KILLIAN DIAMOND PROFESSOR

Associate professor Danae Dinkel’s teaching and research is primarily focused on encouraging all individuals to pursue a healthy lifestyle with a focus on physical activity. Within the School of Health and Kinesiology, she teaches classes related to understanding how to encourage individuals to be more active and how to plan programs to improve overall wellness. Her research has worked with individuals across the lifespan with an emphasis on improving physical activity in early childhood.

Danae Dinkel, Ph.D.
Health and Kinesiology

This professorship is an honor for Dinkel and furthers her commitment to continually improve her teaching and research efforts.

ROBERT T. REILLY PROFESSOR OF COMMUNICATION

Professor Heather Hundley is a seasoned scholar, teacher, and administrator. She has published five books, over 30 scholarly articles and book chapters, and has received awards for her research. Her research and teaching have focused on media and culture, rhetoric, sport, gender, critical/cultural studies, law, and visual communication. She is a former executive director, association president, department chair, and assistant dean. As the director for the School of Communication and recipient of the Robert T. Reilly Professorship, she plans to empower students, faculty, and staff through her mentorship, inspire students, and enhance her research portfolio through collaboration.

CHARLES W. AND MARY C. MARTIN PROFESSOR OF WESTERN AMERICAN HISTORY

Professor Scherer teaches and publishes primarily in the fields of U.S. constitutional and judicial history, Native American legal history, the regional history of Nebraska and the Great Plains, and the American Revolutionary era. He is the author of four books, including Rights in the Balance: Free Press, Fair Trial & Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart; Imperfect Victories: The Legal Tenacity of the Omaha Tribe; and his most recent book, co-authored with John Wunder, titled Echo of Its Time: The History of the Federal District Court of Nebraska. A former practicing attorney, Scherer has argued cases in the Supreme Courts of Nebraska and Ohio, as well as in many federal district and circuit courts. He has frequently appeared on NETV, PBS, History Channel, CSpan, and many other media outlets to discuss topics relevant to his teaching and research.

HARLAN AND NANCY NODDLE PROFESSOR OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Ben O. Smith, Ph.D. is an associate professor and chair of the Department of Economics. Much of his research focuses on developing improved research methodologies in the fields of education and urban economics. Other research focuses on increasing student performance through incentives, selective transparency, and class structure. In his time at UNO, he has taught numerous classes ranging from introductory principles classes to advanced business analytics courses. Smith is thankful and honored by the Harlan and Nancy Noddle Professorship. He views it as an external validation of the importance of quality teaching and applied research at a metropolitan university.

WILLIAM C. HOCKETT DIAMOND PROFESSOR

Roopa Venkatesh, Ph.D., is professor and director of the School of Accounting. She is also a Certified Management Accountant (CMA). Her research draws from theories in psychology and organizational behavior to understand the judgment and decision-making behavior of accountants and auditors. The Hockett Professorship helps her continue her research, teaching, and service initiatives, which have been recognized internationally with the 2020 IMA (Institute of Management Accountants) R. Lee Brummert Award for distinguished academics in management accounting, the 2020 IMA Champion Award, and the IMA Faculty leadership Award in 2017. She serves on the IMA Global Board of Directors (on the Governance Committee), the IMA Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Committee, and as Chair of the IMA Committee on Academic Relations.
