This Human Rights Forum and CHARLA addresses migration and borders. The southern border of the United States has historically been a factor in political debates and elections. Recently, politicians have used the idea of “border security” as a bargaining tool, and media figures report on numbers of border crossings, sometimes without much context. This forum features researchers and practitioners who study history, social context, and policy around contemporary human migration, to speak about how we understand “the border,” borders, and movement across them. We hope audience members will come away with a deeper understanding of border concerns, and how communities and policymakers can move forward in addressing the realities of contemporary migration.

Food will be provided, first come, first served.
