Angela Brown, University of Nebraska at Omaha

Department of Religious Studies, University of Nebraska at Omaha

The UNO Department of Religious Studies is involved in some of the most exciting programs in the College of Arts and Sciences. Religious Studies has a long history of partnership with The Journal of Religion and Film, the Goldstein Center for Human Rights, SPHRS: Spirituality, Public Health, and Religious Studies, the Schwalb Center for Israel and Jewish Studies, and the Batchelder Conference on Biblical Archaeology. Our faculty play key roles academic programs like Native American Studies, Medical Humanities, Islamic Studies, and Ancient Mediterranean Studies. UNO Religious Studies alumni have enrolled in graduate programs across the USA, most recently at the University of Chicago and Harvard Divinity School. We have organized academic conferences and multi-year research projects not only in the United States but across the world in places like Turkey, the Netherlands, Japan, and Israel.

Tri-Faith Initiative

Tri-Faith Initiative is the world's first intentional co-location of a synagogue, church, mosque, and an interfaith center. These four autonomous organizations attract spiritual seekers, the religiously curious, and even those with no religious affiliation. As an interfaith non-profit, Tri-Faith counters the rise in hate crimes and religious hostility through educational and relational programs, advocacy actions, and thought leadership.

Additional support from: UNO College of Arts and Sciences, Goldstein Center for Human Rights, Goldstein Family Community Chair in Human Rights, Islamic Studies Program, Department of History

Many thanks to the Shalom Hartman Institute and the Pontifical Biblical Institute for hosting our sessions. And a big THANKS to the Tantur Ecumenical Institute for their gracious hospitality
