Research Experience

- November 2010 – February 2012: Truancy in Omaha, Nebraska. Collected data to facilitate judicial understanding of how a new truancy law was working and possible indirect effects of mandatory court.
- August 2004 – 2008: Domestic Violence Coordinating Council. Collected data and helped the agency develop a risk assessment tool.
- August 2001 – May 2003: Research Assistant for the Computer Core of the Population Research Institute, through the Social Science Research Institute. Largely responsible for teaching methodological workshops, which included Multilevel Modeling, Stata, HLM, Web Basics, EndNote, MS Access, and Using the Add Health Data. In addition to teaching workshops, I assisted affiliated faculty members with statistical analyses for their projects.
- 2002 – 2003: Statistical consultant and researcher for Tremin project, which deals with women's health issues. My primary work involved consultations about data format and analysis. I developed statistical code for multiple aspects of this project (both alone and in conjunction with a population research institute SAS consultant), ran statistical analyses (alone), and found a pictorial way of displaying the results of variations in yearly menstruation patterns before menopause.
- 2002: Statistical researcher for the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. My portion of the project involved examining racial and gender bias in the court system using surveys designed by the Project Coordinators on behalf of the Supreme Court and completed anonymously by courtroom members, such as prosecuting attorneys and defense attorneys. Primary responsibility involved entering the surveys into a database and statistically answering a number of questions asked by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court via the Project Manager.
- April 1998 – April 2001: Research Assistant for the Communities That Care Evaluation in Pennsylvania, Mark Greenberg, Principal Investigator and D. Wayne Osgood, Co-PI. General responsibilities included data management and analyses, although I also participated in survey design, data collection (interviews), design strategies, and overall project coordination.
