ELIZABETH BARKLEY

Terms of Engagement: Student Engagement in Today’s Digital University Classroom

Elizabeth F. Barkley, Ph.D. is Professor of Music History at Foothill College, Los Altos, California. With almost four decades as an innovative and reflective teacher, she has received numerous honors and awards, including being named California’s Higher Education Professor of the Year by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Barkley was also named one of two Carnegie Scholars in the discipline of music by the Carnegie Foundation in conjunction with the Pew Charitable Trusts, and her Musics of Multicultural America course was selected as “Best Online Course” by the California Virtual Campus. A popular keynote speaker and workshop presenter, her interests include engaging students through active and collaborative learning, transforming F2F and online curriculum to meet the needs of diverse learners, and connecting learning goals with assessment. Barkley holds a B.A. and M.A. from University of California, Riverside and a Ph.D. from University of California, Berkeley.

This Campus Conversations event is co-hosted by UNO Digital Learning, UNO Center for Faculty Excellence, and NU Online.

This event will be live streamed here:

news.unomaha.edu/campusconversations