AUSTRALIA

UNO in Sydney

Study abroad down under! Spend six weeks in Sydney, Australia through a partnership between the University of Nebraska at Omaha and the University of Sydney. You will study alongside other UNO students on this unique, experiential learning program for UNO credit. The UNO course that you will take is PE3900, Motivation for Physical Activity. When taught in Sydney the class takes the approach of looking at the environmental influence on physical activity behaviors.

For example, how does the community environment (walkability, park/playground accessibility and quality, population density, public transportation opportunity, etc) influence the choices people make regarding daily physical activity behaviors? Furthermore, we will take a comparative approach by recognizing the similarities and differences between the community environment in Sydney versus that in Omaha.

CHINA

Business in China

The rise of China is a business story of our time. It has major influence on the world economy and geopolitics. In this course, we explore the importance of China as a production base and consequently, also as a market for multinational firms, including those from the US. The course aims at understanding why focusing on China matters and the basic facts about its various environments as they affect business in general: political, legal, cultural, and most importantly, institutional. This discussion is also important for the US-based managers to gauge the bottlenecks and opportunities. The class will visit two of China's most iconic cities- Beijing and Shanghai, to experience Chinese business culture firsthand. There will also be opportunity to explore Chinese history and culture at sites like the Great Wall.

Documenting Social Change

Study social change in China using photography as a tool of social research. China is an ancient civilization that only recently pursued "modernization" and change. China's 4,000-year old dynastic system ended in 1911 and since then has undergone profound transformation. China today is the world's second largest and fastest growing economy - making it a unique setting to study social change.

In this course, students will learn about social change in China from a comparative, historical, and social work perspective. The goal is to gain social welfare insights using photography as a tool of social research and change.

Irish Literature & History

Do you want to explore a stone fort first built in 1100 B.C. with a view of the Atlantic Ocean from the edge of a 300-foot cliff? Or have lunch in a pub founded in 900 A.D.? Do you want to walk in the footsteps of James Joyce, Countess Markievicz, William Butler Yeats, Patrick Pearse, or Oscar Wilde? If you do, then join us for the 2018 Ireland Study Abroad tour.

Spend time discovering three of the most beautiful cities in Ireland, and making many wonderful stops along the way. We visit Galway and Killarney in the spectacular West and then travel to Dublin. You will take a ferry to the island of Inis Mór, travel the Ring of Dingle and visit an early medieval church, climb to the top of the Rock of Cashel to see the ruins of a Norman castle, see a play at the world famous Abbey Theatre, and visit the many museums, parks, and yes, pubs, that make Dublin one of the most exciting cities in the world!

Athletic Training & Public Health

For Spring Break 2018, the School of Health and Kinesiology will offer a study abroad program in Nicaragua, with a multi-disciplinary focus including Athletic Training and Public Health. This program will provide multiple learning opportunities for University of Nebraska students at the Universidad Americana - UAM: Managua. Students will have the opportunity to engage with local sports coaches and their student-athletes throughout this 10-day experiential learning experience. Students will interact closely with students from UAM in an environment designed to promote skill transfer and cross-cultural learning. This project will revolve around the central idea that sports are the common language which brings us together. Students will provide didactic and laboratory instruction to Nicaraguan sports coaches and their student-athletes, learn local culture and customs, and participate in weekend excursions in which they will experience Nicaragua outside of the capital city.

Spanish Language & Public Health

Join students from UNK, UNMC, UNO and UNL on this University of Nebraska study abroad program in Nicaragua summer 2018! This interdisciplinary course and study abroad experience will allow you to both develop Spanish language skills and explore public health in the Nicaraguan context. This dual-site trip will begin by providing you with two weeks of level-specific language instruction at the Centro de Idiomas at UNAN-León. During your time in this beautiful, colonial city, you will also participate in afternoon cultural activities and public health discussions. Enjoy a weekend excursion to explore the city of Granada, Lake Nicaragua and Masaya Volcano. After two weeks of language preparation, you'll travel to Estelí, a tranquil city in Nicaragua's northern highlands. En route, you will swim and relax at the scenic Laguna de Apoyo, a volcanic crater lake. Finally, in Estelí you'll join Aspire Global Health, a U.S.-based global non-profit organization, to implement a public health project in the rural areas surrounding Estelí.
