

Dear Makayla,

It's you! Writing to you from the future, only a few short weeks from graduating with your undergrad. As you could already guess, it goes by pretty fast, but don't worry - you have so much to look forward to! You'll meet lots of new people your freshman year, and you'll make memories with all your late night dorm adventures.

You'll definitely have many late nights of homework and projects... and you and your lighting design classmates will have lots of PKI bonding time! You'll find your church family in Omaha and the people you meet there will become your best friends, mentors, support system, and a great source of joy!

You will invest and grow in the continual new relationships with other students, and you will also invest in your college, your classmates, and your own future by involving yourself in the college of engineering and the student organizations it has to offer.

You'll walk away with the relationships that have walked with you through life and through your engineering classes and experiences the last four years.

Enjoy your time at UNO, and don't forget to slow down, enjoy your community, and invite others into that community. Have fun!!

Love, Makayla
