

From Savage Beast to Exalted Warrior: the Romanticization of the Highland Warrior in British Literature and Culture

2020 GRACA Grant Proposal

Project Description

The purpose of this project is to write a researched academic manuscript chapter exploring the romanticization of the Scottish Highland Warrior figure in British literature and culture. I intend to spend multiple weeks examining pamphlets, letters, military dispatches, official court and legislative documents, charitable treatises, and other primary materials at the National Library of Scotland to provide cultural and historical context that will enable me to draft one chapter of my Master's thesis.

In the Spring of 2019, I wrote a research paper that examined some of the work of Susan Edmonstone Ferrier, a Scottish Romantic novelist. In her 1831 novel Destiny, or the Chieftain's Daughter, Ferrier described Scottish Highlanders at length, often characterizing them as indolent, arrogant, and even savage. My paper examined this savage Highlander trope and the parallels that could be drawn between the "savageness" of the Highlander and the Native Americans. I discovered throughout the course of my research that very little research has been conducted that examines these parallels and the larger romanticization of the Highlander figure in British literature. I hope to contribute meaningful research toward this topic, and this grant will help me do that.

Scottish Literature as a national tradition has emerged in the last five decades as a distinct tradition of literature, with its own historical context, language use, and political, theoretical, and cultural underpinnings. Often subsumed under the more broad category of "British Literature," the study of Scottish writers and their literary inventions has often been overlooked as a unique discipline within the tradition. As interest in uniquely Scottish literature has grown, so has the need for continued scholarship. My research will serve as another contribution to this growing field as it continues to distinguish itself from its English neighbor. I hope to join the ranks of such noted scholars as Silke Strohe, T.M. Devine, and others who have contributed mightily to this discipline in the last 40 years.

The National Library of Scotland and other historical societies in Scotland are sources of invaluable information for my research. The National Library carries over 40 million primary source materials, many of which are not available digitally. Of those available digitally, I am unable to access them as I do not have a UK address. While I can search through the library's online catalog, I cannot pull up any digital items without first updating my address to a current UK residence. In order for me to access either the print or digital materials (many of which have no copy), I must be present in the UK to view them (the address of my hostel is a suitable substitute for a permanent residence).

In May 2019, I traveled to Scotland for 10 days to undertake preliminary searches of the primary source material that might be beneficial to my research. This month-long trip to Scotland in July of 2020 will give me the time I need to conduct the bulk of my research that is necessary for me to complete my master's thesis. Building on the list of items that I found during my short stay in 2019, I have included a document with this proposal that gives an idea of the sort of materials I plan to examine. This document will change as my focus narrows throughout the course of my research, but it is a stable place to begin.

Upon the completion of my Master's work at UNO, I intend to continue on to a PhD program in Scotland, where I will continue my academic research in Scottish Literature. I'm particularly interested in the Scottish National tale, a unique literary invention that enjoyed great success in the late Romantic era (Sir Walter Scott is a noted contributor). I also want to expand my breadth of knowledge to Scottish Gaelic-language literature, which is a sub-discipline that is as rich as its English-language counterpart. I have already begun learning Gaelic - both as an academic skill and a way to connect to my own Gaelic-speaking ancestors. It is my hope that I will be able to contribute important scholarship to the examination of Scottish Literature as a national tradition and come to a better understanding of my own cultural legacy as a Scottish-American scholar. In many ways, this grant is the beginning of what I hope will be a lifetime of academic work in this field.

Activities and Process

If awarded this grant, I will be able to fund my travel to Scotland in July of this year and stay for a month to conduct my research. The first few months of 2020 will be spent finalizing the list of items that I intend to examine, putting together the pull requests for those items, and preparing for my travel to Scotland. I have already taken the time to book a hostel for the duration of my stay to be paid for upon my arrival in July (included in the budget justification).

Upon my arrival in Edinburgh, I will submit the pull requests of the items (6 at a time) and begin the process of going through them. I am attempting to gather crucial historical and cultural context that will supplement my examination of the Highland warrior trope in British Literature of Empire for my Master's thesis (to be completed in the Fall of 2020). Among the materials that I will examine are military dispatches from the Highlands in the later half of the 1700s, charitable treatises and other pamphlets that discuss the growing economic hardship among Highland families in the early 19th century, and the effect that changing economic and political conditions had on the Highland population in the decades following the Jacobite Rising of 1745.

Product

Upon my return from Scotland, I will use the collected research to prepare a draft of a chapter of my Master's thesis that will offer necessary context for my examination of two British novels that include this Highland military trope. It is my belief that following the romanticization of this particular cultural figure, its inclusion in literature at the height of the British Empire was an indicator of its position as a specific signifier of the success of a colonizing endeavor.

Upon its completion, I intend to submit this chapter and other portions of my Master's thesis to various academic journals that are prominent in the field, including Scottish Literary Review and Studies in Scottish Literature. I plan to submit my completed thesis at the end of 2020 and I need this grant to help me complete crucial research that would allow me to successfully complete this project within my proposed timeline.

Project Timeline

Jan-July 2020	Preparation for research trip - including the completion of proposed bibliography of primary sources that I plan to investigate.
July 2020	Conduct research at the National Library of Scotland in Edinburgh, Sir Duncan Rice Library at the University of Aberdeen in Aberdeen, Scotland, and the Historical Societies of Inverness, Aberdeen, Glasgow, and Edinburgh.
August 2020	Return from Scotland, organize collected archival material and notes and begin the drafting process.
Aug - Dec 2020	Complete the final draft of the chapter and begin the editing process
Dec 2020	Submit master's thesis.

Student/Faculty Mentor Roles

I am an MA candidate studying late Romantic and Victorian-era British Literature at the English Department at UNO. I will be undertaking all of the work of researching and collating data and other items, drafting my manuscript chapter, and presenting a conference paper outlining my research in the Spring of 2021.

Dr. Lisabeth Buchelt of the UNO English Department will act as faculty mentor for this research. She will be a point of contact while I am overseas and provide critical insight into Irish/Scottish/Celtic studies, as well as offer advice and support as I work through the list of archival materials.

Previous Funding

This project has not been funded previously, and will be a completely new project.

References and Working Bibliography

I have attached a spreadsheet of catalog items that I intend to examine while conducting my research at the National Library of Scotland in July 2020. The information in this spreadsheet is subject to change based upon the needs of my research. Also attached are fee schedules and reservation receipts for your reference.

Of the thirty-three (33) items on the following table, five (5) items are digitally available. Those digitized items are not accessible without an updated UK address, and therefore cannot be viewed unless I am in the UK. As a Humanities scholar, it is imperative that I be able to access these (and the other archival items) in order to complete my research.

22 January 2020

To the GRACA Awards Committee:

I write in support of Melanie Buer's application for a GRACA Award to travel to Scotland in summer 2020. I know Melanie as a student and as an advisee, and she is without question one of the finest students with whom I have ever had the pleasure to work. It is my great privilege to be working with such a bright young scholar who is on her way to making many important contributions to the field of Scottish Studies.

Melanie's thesis builds on previous scholars' work on the trope of the Highland Warrior, while simultaneously breaking new ground by examining the trope in lesser-known and neglected Scottish writers. As such, Melanie's work has the potential to make a major scholarly contribution to this field. It is part of the disciplinary expectation when working in cultural studies areas that the scholar contextualize the literature under consideration within broader frames of intellectual history, aesthetic movements, or cultural constructions of race, gender or ethnicity, and Melanie is well-versed in this methodological expectation of her field of study as well as well-practiced in the successful execution of the gathering, analysis, and synthesis of a diverse set of materials.

It is unusual for a young scholar to recognize that the type of archival research necessary to produce this kind of thesis is actually a two-part process: 1) that of assessing what materials are available in an archive and which of those will be useful to the researcher's project; and, 2) actually utilizing the pertinent materials. Melanie's short, self-funded research trip in May 2019, during which she assessed what pertinent primary documents are available and built the list and bibliography attached to this application has set her up perfectly to conduct her research efficiently in her proposed time frame of one month. In terms of her proposed budget, Melanie has calculated as well as she can, given currency fluctuations, the total cost for this research trip. As her faculty mentor, my role is to simply to help Melanie to think through her own ideas, to provide suggestions for resources, to provide a letter of introduction for the necessary archives, or perhaps to recommend scholars who might be helpful. This is very much Melanie's research project as I am not a co-contributor in any way.

I cannot stress enough to the committee the imperative nature of Melanie's research trip to Scotland, as the materials to be viewed are absolutely necessary to the completion of her thesis, and given the geographic restrictions the National Library has put on the materials she literally cannot conduct the research without being in Edinburgh.

Sincerely,
Dr. Lisabeth C. Buchelt
